Course Overview

We're pretty sure that you know exactly what a hairdresser is. Also known as hairstylists, they specialise in cutting, colouring and styling people's hair in a way that complements their features such as skin complexion and face shape in order to enhance their overall appearance.

There is so much more to being a hairdresser than just cutting or styling hair. The basic hairdresser job description includes responsibilities beyond hair treatments such as maintaining the cleanliness of the salon and equipment, looking after the inventory of hair products, collecting payments and ensuring that the clients receive exemplary customer service in an orderly and timely manner.

Most hairdressers possess a vast range of skills, but some might choose to specialise in particular treatments and styling techniques. Choosing a specific area of expertise could help you stand out from other hairstylists and put you in higher demand as a consequence. Some of the treatments that aren't usually considered to be standard include the following:

- Specific colouring techniques e.g. balayage
- Artificial hair extensions and weaves
- Chemical relaxing / keratin straightening
- Traditional or modern perms
- Hair extension styling
- Braiding
- Occasion styling e.g. weddings
- Scalp treatment
- Hot oil treatment

Detox treatment
Hair glossing
